

I got arrested. What happens now?

Can police search me or my car after I get arrested?

Yes. After police arrest you, they usually search you for weapons and other contraband like drugs before putting you in their squad car. State and federal law say they can do this if the circumstances are reasonable.

If police ask to search your car, you should always say no. Police can sometimes search your car without your permission, like if you were arrested after a traffic stop. But you should never give them permission to search your car.

In Minnesota, the police can get a warrant for your blood or pee if they think you are driving under the influence of alcohol or illegal drugs. If you do not consent (agree) to this testing after they have gotten a warrant, you may be charged with a crime, even if you are sober.

Do they take me to jail?

Yes. After officers arrest you and do a search, they take you to the local police station or the county jail. At the police station or jail, you are booked. This means they take your fingerprints and photograph and get personal information.

Can police ask me questions or interrogate me?

Yes. After placing you under arrest, they might ask you questions about the alleged crime. Before they try to question you, they must tell you your constitutional rights.

Some of these rights are:

- The right to remain silent. This means you don't have to say anything to the police.
- The right to have a lawyer represent you and be with you during any questioning.
- The right to a public defender if you can't afford to pay for a lawyer.

Even if officers do not tell you that you have these rights, you still have them. In order to protect your rights, you must say them clearly and out loud. For example, "I am going to remain silent" or "I'm not going to say anything" and "I want to talk to a lawyer."

Do I have to stay in jail?

After you are booked, you could be released (let go) right away OR they might detain you (keep you) in jail until you can be seen by a judge. A judge sets your bail. Bail includes conditions and dollar amount you have to pay to be released. This depends on the crime you are charged with and on what the jail or Sheriff's office think. They can decide to release or detain you. You can find more information on release and detention below.

What happens if I am released?

If you are released, the police may give you a citation right away that lists the charges against you. Not everyone who is arrested has a citation. If you don't get a citation from the police, watch your mail for a document from the court called a Summons. This has information about when and where your first court date is. Your first court date generally happens 1-2 months from the date of your arrest, but it may take longer than that if the courts are full. If you don't get a Summons in the mail, call the courts to see if there is a case against you or any warrants against you.

What happens if I am detained?

If you are detained, the law says that you must have a hearing before a judge within 36 hours. The 36 hours does not include the day you are arrested, Sundays, or federal/state holidays.

While you are waiting to see a judge, you may want to hire a lawyer. See "How can I find a lawyer?" section below.

Who should I talk to about my case?

You should talk to a lawyer about your case. Do not talk about your case with anyone else detained in the jail. Do not talk about details of your case on the phone while in jail. In both situations, the things you say could be used against you in court. If you are talking to your lawyer on the phone from jail, ask them if it is safe to talk about your case.

How can I find a lawyer?

Try to find a lawyer to represent you as soon as possible. Try to do this before your first court date.

If you can't afford a private lawyer, you may be able to get a public defender. To apply for a public defender, go to <https://mncourts.gov/Help-Topics/Public-Defender.aspx>. If you can't get online to apply for a public defender before your court date, you should be able to ask for a public defender at your first court hearing.

You may also be able to get a free or low-cost lawyer through:

- The Legal Rights Center - free criminal defense services for adults and juveniles in Hennepin County. For more information, visit the website or call (612) 337-0030.
- Neighborhood Justice Center - free or low-cost criminal defense services for people facing criminal charges in Ramsey County, Dakota County, and Washington County. For more information, visit the website or call (651) 222-4703.
- Indian Legal Assistance Program - free or low-cost criminal defense services in St. Louis County, Lake County, Cook County, Aitkin County, Carlton County, and Bois Forte Tribal Court. For more information, visit the website or call (218) 727-2881 or (888) 249-3205.
- Regional Native Public Defense Corporation - free or low-cost criminal defense services to federally enrolled tribal members in Cass County, Becker County, Clearwater County, Beltrami County, Mahnomen County, and Itasca County. For more information, visit the website or call (218) 339-5680 (Leech Lake) or (218) 983-3285 (White Earth).

If you want to hire a private lawyer, search for one through the Minnesota State Bar Association at <https://www.mnbar.org/member-directory/find-a-lawyer>.

If you can't find a lawyer before your first hearing, you can ask for a lawyer or apply for a public defender at that hearing.

What happens at the first court date?

If you are released, your first court hearing normally happens 1-2 months from the date of your arrest. But it can take longer if the courts are full. This is called a first appearance or an arraignment. At the hearing, you or your lawyer meet with the prosecutor to talk about your case. Often, the prosecutor offers a plea deal to resolve the case. You and your lawyer decide if you want to take the plea deal or wait. If you choose to take the plea deal, you enter a guilty plea during that first hearing. If you choose to wait, the court schedules another hearing in 1-6 months. Waiting can give more time to review evidence and investigate the case.

If you are detained, the first court hearing is for the judge to decide on bail and other conditions of release. This might be things like drug testing, an ankle monitor, or restrictions on having firearms. Your lawyer and the prosecutor both make arguments about bail and other conditions. Usually, your lawyer argues for low or no bail and for limited conditions of release. The prosecutor may agree with your lawyer, or they may argue that you should have a high bail or strict conditions of release. This hearing usually only lasts 5 minutes or less.

NOTE: This hearing is not to decide if you can be released. Under the Minnesota Constitution, every person has the right to be released before trial, as long as they pay bail and/or agree to follow any other conditions. The judge CANNOT detain you without setting bail.

Can the judge release me?

The judge makes the final decision about bail and other conditions of release. A judge generally has 3 options:

1. You can be released without conditions. This means you don't have to pay bail, have an ankle monitor, or agree to any other conditions. You must promise the court that you will show up for future hearings.
2. You can be released with conditions. One of these conditions might be that you have to pay bail before you can be released. Other conditions can be things like a no contact order, drug testing, an ankle monitor or other electronic monitoring, check-ins with probation agents, and more.
3. You can be released with bail as the only condition. If this happens, you pay the full bail amount and you don't have to agree to any other conditions.

How does the judge decide how much my bail should be?

The amount of bail and the other conditions that the judge decides about depends on things like:

- The facts of your case
- The crime you are charged with
- How strong is the evidence against you
- Your family and community ties
- If you have a job
- Your mental health, including any substance use issues
- Your criminal history
- If you have ever failed to show up in court when you were supposed to
- If you are a risk to the alleged victim, any other person, or the community

The judge looks at the last 2 things on the list when deciding on conditions for release.

In many cases, judges use a pretrial risk assessment to help them decide. You get a score based on your criminal history, history of court appearances, employment, education, and other factors. The score determines if you are low, medium, or high risk.

How do I pay bail?

If the judge orders you to pay bail, you can do that in one of 3 ways:

1. Pay the full bail amount yourself, or with the help of a friend or family member. If you do this, you need to pay the bail all at once, and you may need to have the exact amount in cash. Call your local jail to find out their rules. You get the bail money back when the case is resolved and you meet all the conditions. You have to ask for it back in writing or talk to your lawyer.
2. If you can't afford to pay the bail, you can apply to People's Bail Fund of Minnesota. Your lawyer or a family member or friend can ask for you. It can be done online.
3. You can also use a for-profit bail bond company. This is done by another person - usually a family member or a friend. When you use a bail bond company, the person pays a fee to the bond company. The fee is usually 10% of the bail amount. They do not get this money back. When they pay the fee, they also sign a contract with the company. Under the contract, that person is responsible for making sure that you go back to court after being released.

Once the fee is paid and the contract is signed, the bond company files a document with the court. This document promises that the company will pay the full bail amount if you don't show up in court. If you don't show up, the bond company has to pay the full bail amount. The person who signed the contract has to pay back the full bail amount to the bond company.

Be careful!

Contracts with bail bond companies often include serious conditions, like letting them or their representatives (bounty hunters) search the signer's home, track their vehicle, track their job status, and gain access to their private information, like medical records. The person signing the contract may also get repeated phone calls, text messages, and emails from the bond company. It's important to understand the risks and be careful when paying bail bond companies for their services.

If you need to pay bail for immigration detention the rules are different. See our fact sheet Immigration Bonds.

What if I can't pay bail?

If you can't pay bail, you probably stay in jail until your case can be resolved, with a trial or a plea deal. This may take a few days to a few months, depending on the type of case and how full the court's case load is.

You can ask the court to review and reconsider your bail at any time. If you are struggling to come up with bail money or if the high bail is keeping you from getting out of jail, talk to your lawyer about asking for a bail review hearing.

What happens after my first court date?

If you don't take a plea deal at the first court date, you have at least 1 more court date. This is called a pretrial hearing or an omnibus hearing. It usually happens 1-2 months after your first court date, but it could be longer depending on how full the court's case load is. The second court date is another chance for you and your lawyer to talk about the case with the prosecutor, consider a plea, or ask for more time. If you ask for more time, you may have 2-3 pretrial or omnibus hearings while you wait for your trial.

Other types of hearings you might have before your trial could be hearings about:

- If there is probable cause to believe that a crime was committed
- The admissibility of evidence
- The use of evidence related to your criminal history or the criminal history of other possible witnesses

Some of these hearings could end up in your case being dismissed or in you getting a better offer from the prosecutor.

If you don't resolve your case during these pretrial hearings, a trial is likely. In most cases, you have the right to a trial by jury. But you can choose to have a bench trial, which is a trial by the judge instead of a jury.

Fact Sheets are legal information NOT legal advice. See a lawyer for advice.

Don't use this fact sheet if it is more than 1 year old. Ask us for updates, a fact sheet list, or alternate formats.

© 2027 Minnesota Legal Services Coalition. This document may be reproduced and used for non-commercial personal and educational purposes only. All other rights reserved. This notice must remain on all copies. Reproduction, distribution, and use for commercial purposes are strictly prohibited.